This training is tailored for behavioral health professionals aimed at enhancing their effectiveness in communicating with and providing support to individuals who use drugs. The training will emphasize best practices in language usage, fostering empathy, reducing stigma, and promoting positive therapeutic relationships.

Behavioral health professionals frequently encounter individuals who use drugs in their practice. Effective communication and rapport-building are crucial in facilitating successful treatment outcomes and improving the overall well-being of this population. However, interactions with people who use drugs can present unique challenges, including stigma, mistrust, and language barriers. Therefore, equipping professionals with the necessary skills and knowledge is essential to provide optimal care and support.
